Gov. George W. Bush campaigns in Merrimack, N.H. during the annual Fourth of July parade Sunday. In his ongoing effort to support for his 2002 presidential bid, Bush will spend today meeting with church and state leaders in Salt Lake City.

Republican presidential hopeful George W. Bush is scheduled to meet with the First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints today in Salt Lake City.

"It's expected to be a private courtesy," said Dan Rascon, public spokesperson for the church. "Historically, church leaders often meet with political candidates and officials," Rascon said.

Vil Varela, regional chair of the Bush campaign, said he also will meet with several governors and senators.

Bush arrived at the Million Air hangar Tuesday at 9 p.m., where he was greeted by Gov. Mike Leavitt and briefly with the press.

Sporters and business leaders are invited to attend a meeting with Bush at 9 a.m. today at the Salt Lake City Marriott. Before the meeting, Bush will host a private breakfast for business leaders and campaign directors.

Shortly after the supporters meeting, he will meet with church leaders at the LDS Church Administration Building, Rascon said.

Although Bush's campaign committee planned the trip to Utah, the Utah Republican Party has arranged some meetings and travel arrangements for Bush, said Scott Simpson, executive director of the Utah Republican Party.

"We are running some of [Bush's] resources. We are doing what we normally would for this type of event," Simpson said.

Simpson will meet with Bush and his campaign committee today.

While he is in Utah, Bush will also meet with the governors of Nevada, Colorado, Wyoming, Idaho, Montana and with Sen. Gordon Smith of Oregon as well as several of the lieutenant governors and political officials of these states.

Bush will fly out of Salt Lake City on Wednesday afternoon.

Utah fires near containment

By ERIC JENSEN AND JASON BURGESS

Fire crews have tamed two fires burning south of Utah County and hope to have both mountain blazes completely contained by the end of the week.

Investigating cause in Juab

The Juab County fire that has burned 61,400 acres since last Friday may have been sparked by railroad workers.

"The cause of the railroad fire is still under investigation, but it was possibly caused by railroad workers grinding the tracks," said Susan Haywood, information officer for the Interagency Fire Center in Richfield.

Authorities who evacuated residents Friday allowed people to return to their homes in Eureka and Mammoth on Monday. The railroad fire came within two miles of Eureka and destroyed a cabin and mining equipment. No other structures were harmed in the fire.

If investigators can prove that the cause of the fire was sparks from grinding, the railroad can be held responsible for the cost. As of Tuesday, the Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management have spent 1.5 million dollars to fight the railroad fire. Most of the cost was in labor and equipment, which included 200 firefighters, seven planes, four helicopters, 32-engines, five bulldozers and two water trucks.

Union Pacific contracts with another company to grind their rails. Union Pacific spokesperson Mike Furtne said the grinding company believes that it did not start the railroad fire.

Crews are now securing the fire line and soaking hot spots with back-pack-mounted water sprayers. The fire was expected to be completely contained by 4 p.m. Tuesday.

"We got the better hand in this fire because the winds died down and because of hard work by firefighters," Haywood said.

Flames on West Mountain

Deep mountainous terrain and hot temperatures on Tuesday challenged 216 firefighters who have continued to battle a two-week fire blazing on Payson's West Mountain.

The high winds have spread the mountain fire quickly, burning nearly 9,000 acres of the Uintah National Forest near Utah Lake. The cause of the blaze is still under investigation, officials said.

Eighty percent of the fire has been restrained with full containment expected today at 6 p.m. Complete control is expected by Thursday evening, said Loyal Clark, a spokesman for the Uintah National Forest.

Firefighters performed a burn-out operation Tuesday by setting fire to the vegetation between the fire and the designated line of containment. Fire crews are concerned because the winds and dry weather increase the probability of additional fires.

The length of the West Mountain fire has fatigued and depleted the resources of local firefighters. Additional support has not only come from crews in Utah county but also from federal and state agencies, including firefighters from Idaho, Arizona and California.

As of yet, no injuries have been reported and no structures have been damaged.

Other states battle blazes

Associated Press

Firefighters marched toward containment of four blazes that have blackened more than 83,000 acres across the West in less than a week.

In addition to the Utah fires, a 12,000-acre brush fire in Nevada that began Sunday near Sparks, was expected to be completely controlled this week. Erratic winds blew flames against Interstate 80, but the highway remained open.

In Northern California, a controlled federal burn that became a 2,000-acre wildfire on Friday was mostly contained. Two dozen homes in the mountain hamlet of Lewiston were damaged, at a cost of $1.6 million.

Containment was also expected soon of an 8,000-acre blaze spanning western Colorado and eastern Utah. No homes were threatened.

An unidentified man dips his head under one of the many outdoor water fountains surrounding Capitol Hill to cool down in Washington, D.C., Tuesday. East Coast cities have been suffering since Sunday from a heat wave with temperatures reaching 103 degrees.

Heat claims lives across the nation

Associated Press

Heat exposure is being blamed for the deaths of two children who climbed into cars as they played with siblings during the long Fourth of July weekend.

In addition, the death of a toddler left in a car and an adult were blamed on the heat in Chicago, two adults died of heat-related causes in Philadelphia, and the deaths of a mother and daughter in Newport, Pa., also were believed to be due to the weather.

In Omaha, Neb., 2 1/2-year-old Arnold Guzman died Monday after his 5-year-old brother helped him into a car, shut the door and went off to play. Authorities don't know how long Arnold was inside before his mother found him. The windows were up and temperatures inside were over 100 degrees.

"A 2 1/2-year-old can't easily get out of the car, and the kids were apparently playing in the backyard and forgot about him," police Sgt. Dan Cisar said.

In Masontown, Pa., a 2-year-old boy died Sunday while ducking down in the passenger seat of the family car during a game of hide-and-seek.

When Cody Britt's sisters, age 6 and 3, could not find him, the family began searching for him. On a second check of the car, they opened the passenger door and the boy tumbled out.

Cody had been inside the car for at least an hour, with outside temperatures in the high 90s, and the boy's asthma condition made the heat particularly dangerous, Fayette County Coroner Phillip Reilly said.

In the Chicago suburb of Villa Park, 2-year-old Melanie Auriene died Sunday after she was left in a closed car for about two hours. Police said Melanie fell asleep in the car while a family group returned from a parade and was left inside with the doors and windows shut. The girl's father found her in the car when he arrived to pick her up about two hours later, police said.

No charges had been filed. A 49-year-old Chicago man collapsed and died Sunday with a body temperature of 107 degrees. DeVelle Fredrick also had hypertension and cardiovascular disease, the Cook County medical examiner's office said.

Philadelphia officials said 85-year-old Alice O'Malley and a 67-year-old man whose name was not immediately released died Monday as the heat reached 100 in the city.

Pennsylvania state police said Helen Mae Freet, 80, and her daughter, Rose Marie, 54, were found dead Monday in their home in Newport, about 25 miles northwest of Harrisburg.

Relatives found the women, who lived in a house that had no air conditioning and only one small fan in a window. Both also had medical conditions that may have contributed to their deaths, police said.

Orem finances OK, despite dire reports

By MATTHEW ASTLE

Contrary to a report released by the National League of Cities last week, city officials say the city is doing fine financially.

The NLC released the results of its annual survey of city fiscal conditions Thursday. The study's results place

Orem in a 25 percent minority of American cities that are less able to meet their financial obligations this year.

"Orem is one of the strongest communities in the state financially,"

—Jim Reams,
Orem City manager

Reams, Orem City manager, in the mail-in survey, conducted by Michael A. Pagano, professor of political science at Miami University at Ohio, asked finance directors of 317 American cities to evaluate city revenues and expenses and to give an opinion on the outlook for the future.

The questions that have created the negative image ask whether the finance director believes the city is better able to meet financial needs in 1999 than last year and whether the city will be better able or less able to address its financial needs in the fiscal year 2000.

"You need to understand the context of the question was asked," said

Randy Arndt, spokesman for the NLC. "This is a comparative question. Compared to how you were doing last year, how are things doing this year?"

Arndt said some cities may be portrayed negatively even if they are doing well.

"A person may say, 'Well, the outlook is still great, but it's not as absolutely stratospheric as last year.' That's where you run into the problem," he said.

Jeff Pedersen,

Orem accounting manager, filled out the survey. He said it was vague and the results distorted reality.

"Our intent was to paint a reality type thing, but you take what on the exterior is kind of a simplified opinion poll and all of a sudden you've got a headline that shows everyone's worried and frightened," he said.

Pedersen said the city is doing very well financially. This year, however, expenses have increased, due to road construction projects like the remodeling of University Mall, public safety costs, city payroll and new federal mandates to protect the city's groundwater. He also said sales tax has not produced as much revenue for the city as it has in the past.

These kinds of expenses are normal for any city, Pedersen said. He said that honesty on a national survey is important so lobbyists know what concerns cities have.

"We didn't anticipate it to cause a furor of this kind. In our mind it was reporting to the NLC what was out there," Pedersen said.

Hatch seeking support for 2002

OAKLEY, Summit County — Utah's three-day July 4 celebration gave Sen. Orrin Hatch three days of festivities at which to solicit support for the presidential bid.

The Republican appealed for money, shook hands, sang patriotic songs, gave speeches, rode in parades and had Cougar Stadium convened as a federal court to swear in 25 new citizens.

Hatch plans to campaign in New Hampshire later this week and possibly in Iowa next week.

The swearing-in of new citizens at Cougar Stadium was carried out by U.S. District Judge Dee Benson, who introduced Hatch with: "Following the administration of the oath, President Orrin Hatch — I mean, Sen. Orrin Hatch — will address the new citizens and pass out certificates."

Hatch pushed for Benson's appointment to the federal bench in 1991.

Benson denied the event was intended to help Hatch's campaign. "I'm apolitical," said Benson, a former Hatch aide and U.S. attorney. "As a judge, I'm not politically active. I will vote but I don't publicly endorse either side."

Illegal vendor sold Smith guns

CHICAGO — Benjamin Nathaniel Smith bought the guns he used in his racist shooting spree from an illegal street dealer after he was turned away by a gun shop that did the required background check, investigators said Tuesday.

The background check showed that an ex-girlfriend of Smith's had taken out a protective order against him because of abuse.

Gun control activists said the case demonstrates the inadequacy of the nation's gun laws, while the gun lobby said the problem is lax enforcement.

The white supremacists had tried to buy two 9 mm handguns and a shotgun on June 23 at a licensed gun shop in Peoria Heights, said Jerry Singer, an agent with the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

After being rejected, Smith bought a Bryco .380-caliber semiautomatic handgun and a .22-caliber pistol from an illegal dealer who already was being investigated by the ATF, Singer said.

Both sides of the gun control debate said the story supported their positions.

Ex-Bronco star fined for poaching

OGDEN, Weber County — Former Denver Broncos football star Rulon Jones, an outfitter, has been sentenced to pay $555, but a 30-day jail sentence for poaching a moose was suspended by the judge.

Jones admitted Tuesday that he allowed a hunter to kill a moose on his land last Nov. 3, four days after the hunting season ended. Jones said he believed the hunter's claim that the season had been extended.

Jones pleaded guilty to aiding and assisting in the unlawful taking of protected wildlife. He also had been charged with failure to properly post a cooperative wildlife management unit.

Riverdale Justice of Peace John L. Sandberg said he imposed a lighter sentence than was possible because he believed that Jones did not intend to break the law.

The maximum possible sentence was a $1,000 fine and six months in jail.

Jones played football at Utah State University and was a Bronco defensive end from 1980 to 1988.

Classroom courtesy becomes law

BATON ROUGE, La. — Gov. Mike Foster on Tuesday signed the nation's first state law requiring students to address teachers as "ma'am" or "sir" or use the appropriate title of Mr., Miss, Ms. or Mrs.

The Republican governor and other politicians said the law will help return respect to the classroom.

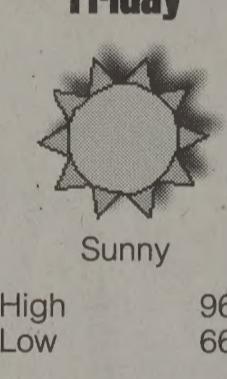

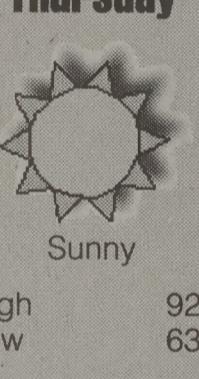

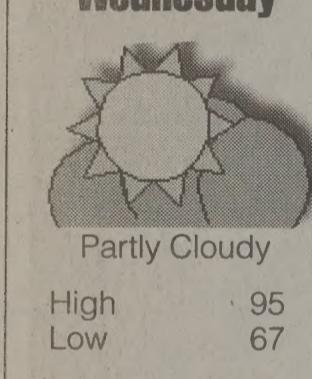

The law will apply to those in kindergarten through fifth grade beginning next fall. Higher grades will be phased in over the next few years, one grade per year.

No punishment is included in the law. Each of Louisiana's 66 school systems will decide how to discipline students refusing to respond politely. However, no student can be expelled or suspended as punishment for disobedience to the new rule.

"The lack of respect in and out of school is a national problem and no one has an answer," said Sen. Don Cravens, a Democrat who sponsored the law.

Around the country, some school systems require parents or students to sign codes of discipline. Some states, notably Arkansas and Georgia, require "character education," teaching honesty, fairness and respect for others.

One child is dead and her brother and father are in critical condition after a driver fell asleep causing an auto-pedestrian accident in Orem on Monday, according to Orem police.

Patricia and Salvador Mendoza of Orem were out for an afternoon walk with their 22-month-old daughter, Isabelle, and 5 1/2-month-old son, Samuel. According to the police report, they were heading north on 400 East and crossing 720 North when a southbound 1997 Geo Metro swerved over the curb and continued toward them.

Isabelle was in a stroller, which ended up underneath the car. She was taken to Timpanogos Regional Hospital and was later transported by Life-Flight to Salt Lake City, and admitted to Primary Children's Medical Center.

"From what I understand, the stroller was pretty well destroyed under the car," said Lt.

Ned Jackson of the Orem Department of Public Safety. Isabelle's life signs were charted unstable, and she was listed in critical condition. Isabelle passed away Monday night only 5 1/2 hours after the accident, said Bonnie Midget, media relations coordinator at the hospital.

Her brother, Samuel, was also life-flighted to Primary Children's Hospital. Because the children are minors, specific information about their injuries could not be released, but Midget said Samuel is listed in serious condition.

The children's father, Salvador, was taken to Utah Valley Regional Medical Center but was later transferred by Air Med to the University of Utah Medical Center.

John Dwan, director of public affairs for the center, said Salvador is listed in critical condition with a fractured skull, broken left arm, and broken right pelvis.

The mother was not injured.

Jackson said Monday night the department was looking at charging Mary Stoen of Orem, the 25-year-old driver of the car, with driving while fatigued, but with the death of the child, a full investigation will be needed before any charges are filed.

Israel swears in new leader

Associated Press

Recently-elected Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak, right, and Foreign Minister David Levy attend the swearing-in ceremony of the new Israeli government in the Knesset in Jerusalem Tuesday.

JERUSALEM — Ehud Barak took the oath of office Tuesday as Israel's new prime minister, ushering in a new government he said would seek peace with the country's Arab neighbors and the Palestinians.

"From here and today, I call on all the region's leaders to stretch out their hands to meet our outstretched hands and forge a peace of the brave," Barak said in an impassioned inaugural speech to the Knesset.

"I do not stand alone on this podium," said Barak — Israel's most decorated soldier. "Together with me are those who returned at dawn from the bombs of the night, on their shoulders bloody stretchers and on them friends empty of any spirit of life."

Barak succeeded Benjamin Netanyahu, who he soundly defeated in the May 17 elections. The Labor leader forged his 18-member Cabinet during six weeks of negotiations that left some members of his own party disgruntled over not receiving the ministerial posts they expected.

Barak eventually forged a coalition that includes 75 of the Knesset's 120 members.

In his address to legislators, Barak called on the United States and Arab nations — including Egypt, Jordan and Morocco — to help reach a negotiated solution to the Middle East conflict.

He said he would negotiate peace with Syria on the basis of U.N. resolutions 242 and 336, the clearest signs Barak intends to offer much of the disputed land in exchange for full peace.

Barak also repeated his intention to return Israeli soldiers within a year.

As to the Palestinians, prime minister said, "We will not dwell on the pain of my people, the pain of the Palestinians, but must not dwell on our losses, but look to the future."

Palestinian leader appeared reassured by emphasis on simultaneous talks.

"We are ready to work to achieve the peace of our said."

Israeli leader announces Cabinet

Associated Press

JERUSALEM — A foreign minister who speaks little English, a police minister who quotes de Tocqueville, a justice minister who never studied law, a rabbi to plan roads and a finance minister whose appointment sent stocks plummeting.

Prime Minister Ehud Barak's new government is a puzzlement to many Israelis, who wonder whether it has what it takes to make the hard choices Israel faces in its negotiations with the Arab world.

Others said the ex-military chief's selections reflect his determination to make fateful decisions alone.

Today, a new government sets out on its way," he said. "This day, I believe, will be marked as a moment of change, a moment of reconciliation.

Judging by the composition of his government, it seems he expects to carry out all these tasks alone, with a commando knife between his teeth," analyst Nahum Barnea wrote in Yediot Achronot.

Presenting his government to parliament on Tuesday, Barak promised sweeping changes: a revival of peace talks frozen by the hard-line government he ousted, the creation of 300,000 jobs, the rescue of Israel's ailing education system. The Cabinet was to be sworn in later Tuesday.

"Today, a new government sets out on its way," he said. "This day, I believe, will be marked as a moment of change, a moment of reconciliation.

young age. Although he said it is embarrassing for him to admit, Johnson said that he has always wanted to be a firefighter: "I guess I never grew up."

Johnson's personal goal to continually increase his knowledge and skills related to the fire service has helped him to progress in his career. "My education has brought me here (to BYU), and I'm very happy."

Safety Director of the Department of Risk Management and Safety Fred Nelson said Johnson is "extremely qualified to be the fire marshal and he does an excellent job for us at BYU."

The duties of a fire marshal are some of the most challenging that Johnson has yet experienced in his career.

"The field of fire protection is the study of life safety; there are an awful lot of facets to that," Johnson says.

One facet to Johnson's job is saving lives, but in the past he has witnessed 17 people lose their lives, mostly due to an "attitude of apathy" toward fire protection, he said.

Johnson has worked to educate youth and other groups to avoid such tragedies in the future.

One thing he advises is to follow the scripture in the Doctrine and Covenants 38:30, "If ye are prepared ye shall not fear."

He said he believes the Lord wants us to enjoy life but that we should be cautious and prepare for every potentially dangerous situation.

Also imperative is a willingness to engage in serious discussion regard-

BYU law professor Richard Wilkins called for students to actively defend the values outlined in the Proclamation to the World at Tuesday's Devotional.

"Without this defense, the family — the most basic community of all — may be imperiled," said Wilkins, director of the World Family Policy Center.

"It is time to recognize and re-emphasize the central role of the family community in creating and maintaining a stable, decent society," he said.

Wilkins' said his devotion to be a champion of the family was strengthened at a U.N. conference in Istanbul. Before Wilkins' message to the U.N. delegates, several speakers urged the council to recognize same-sex partnerships, provide 18 to 20 hours a day of government-sponsored daycare and ensure every woman was fully employed outside the home.

Wilkins declared the family is the basic unit of society where children learn skills that they most likely won't learn elsewhere.

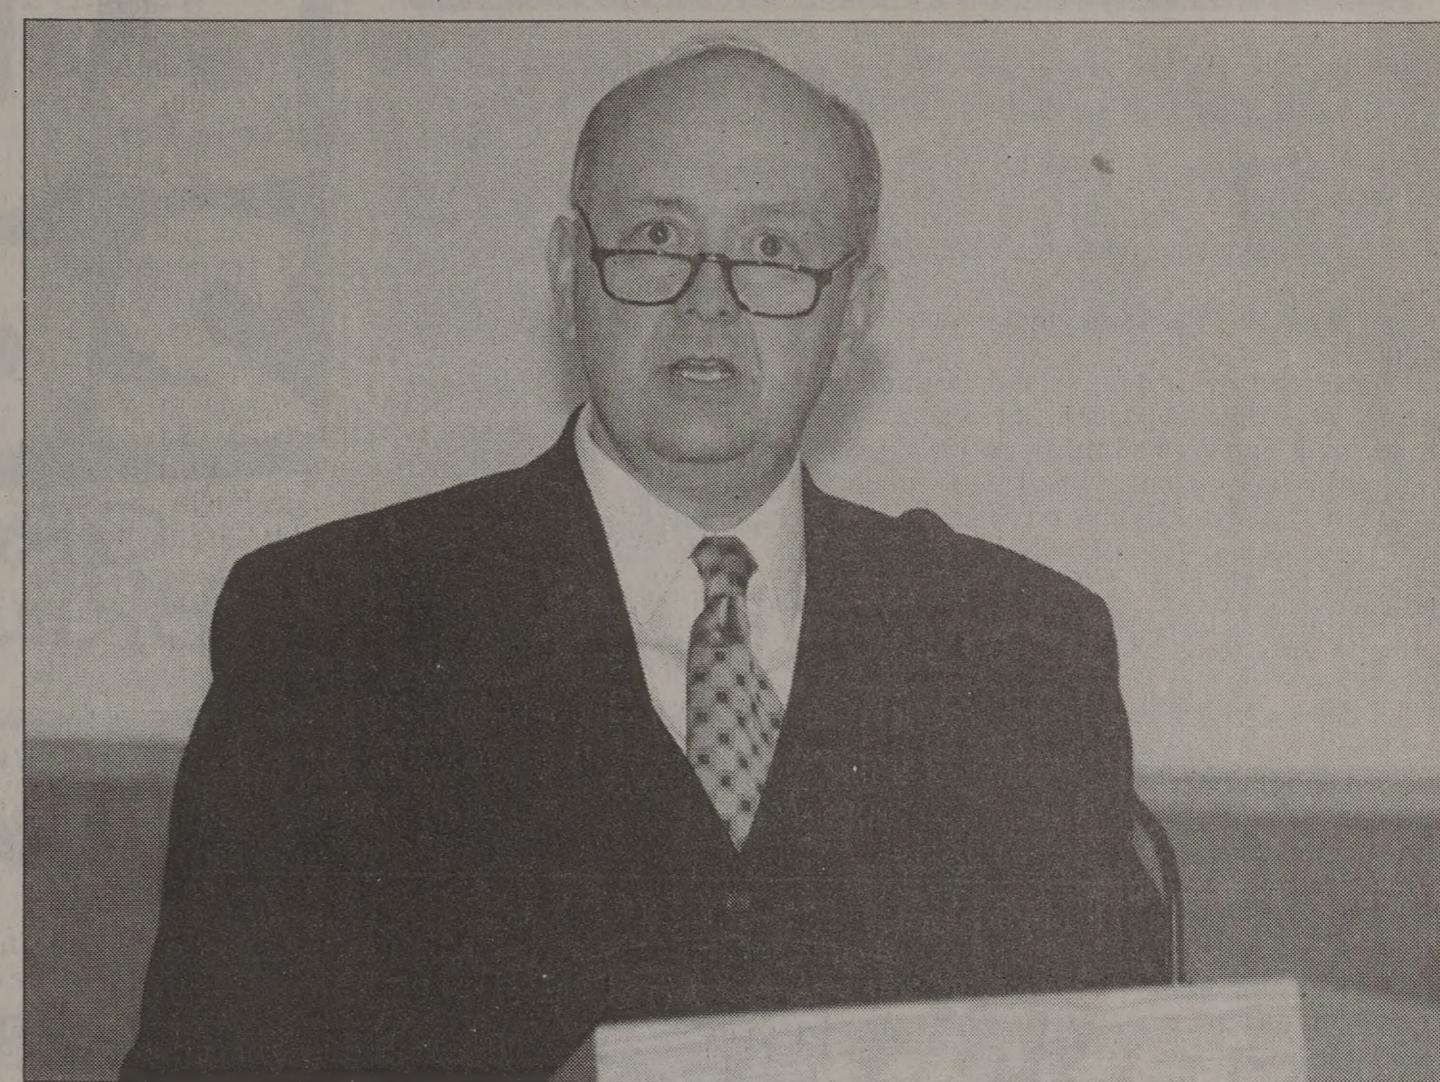

"I urged the delegates to do what they could to strengthen the family, rather than expend the vast majority of their energies creating substitute social structures," Wilkins said.

Wilkins said that after his remarks, the ambassador from Saudi Arabia embraced him and asked what he could do to help.

Wilkins described the results of the Istanbul Conference as "the legal equivalent of the parting of the Red Sea."

In order to proclaim the standards in the Proclamation, students must first possess and exhibit them, Wilkins said. The Proclamation to the World is not merely a nice document, but it is the word of God to the world, he said.

He said students with foreign language experience are needed to contact religious and community leaders of other countries.

ing the family, he said. The World Family Policy Center of BYU will host the Second World Congress of Families this November in Geneva and needs the help of students, Wilkins said.

Wilkins' said his devotion to be a champion of the family was strengthened at a U.N. conference in Istanbul.

"We can do something as simple as signing our name and make such a profound difference," she said.

Wilkins also said that students should strengthen their own familial relationships and continue to believe that what they do makes a difference.

Wilkins' wife, Melany Moore Wilkins, said after she earned a master's degree she suggested to her husband she work part-time. Melany Wilkins said her husband didn't think it would be good for him to try to persuade others to defend family values if his own wife wasn't at home with the family.

"I would rather be at home than any other place," said the mother of the couple's four children.

"It gives the audience a chance to ask questions and to say what they liked or disliked about the play. It also gives the director an opportunity to take responsibility for their artistic choices," Yuin said.

Melissa Oaks, a senior majoring in history education with a minor in theater, directed the final performance of "Goodbye Marianne" last Thursday.

Oaks said she thinks the question-and-answer period can be helpful by letting the director know what the audience liked about the play, but there are some questions she would rather discuss one-on-one.

"I would just ask that those students who attend the performances use some diplomacy in asking questions," Oaks directed the play.

Oaks experienced first hand how much work it takes to direct a production.

OPINION

It's not about fireworks

The fireworks finale of the "Stadium of Fire" and at Orem's "Freedom Festival" amazed even the skeptic of Utah County's dedication to celebrating Independence Day. Fireworks ranging from the traditional fountains and Roman Candles to planets and flowers illuminated the sky.

Does it matter the fireworks show marking Independence Day was not on the Fourth of July, but on the Third of July?

Or does it matter that Provo's Freedom Festival Parade was on July 5th? Or that Orem showed its patriotism on July 5th with concerts, fireworks and other activities?

The fact July 4th fell on a Sunday had many people concerned about what to do with the long weekend and city officials wondering when to have their festivities.

Many cities still had parades and activities on Sunday, but others, citing low public turnout for Sunday community events and the difficulty of getting volunteers on a Sunday, changed the celebrations to Saturday or Monday.

This move by city officials was cited to please the majority, but the faithful breathed a sigh of relief of not having to miss some of the best fireworks of the year. The bottom line: the Sabbath day was kept holy.

Many people in Utah did not have a problem with stretching out the celebrations and avoiding Sunday, as many would have been in church services during parades and fairs. Church services included patriotic songs. Congregations stood and sang "The Star Spangled Banner" as part of the church music.

The Fourth of July was not forgotten in celebration. A nondenominational patriotic service with an Air Force Band, patriotic speakers and city officials participated in the program conducted in the Marriott Center on the Sabbath.

The applause for the speakers and music groups was not just for the program but for city officials willing to move celebrations and keep Sabbath day holy.

However, several hundred people in Mesa, Ariz., decided they did not want their holiday celebrations changed to accommodate the LDS majority. The club sponsoring Mesa's Independence day celebrations remembered the poor turnout they had the last time July 4th fell on a Sunday and changed the events to the following Monday, a federal holiday.

Protesters called the move "un-American" and decried it as a violation of their rights to be patriotic.

Did we miss something?

Or was it that the formula of fireworks, barbecue, concerts and parades shows patriotism in America?

Or is it that they can only be patriotic one day a year because they need festivities to celebrate the Independence of this country?

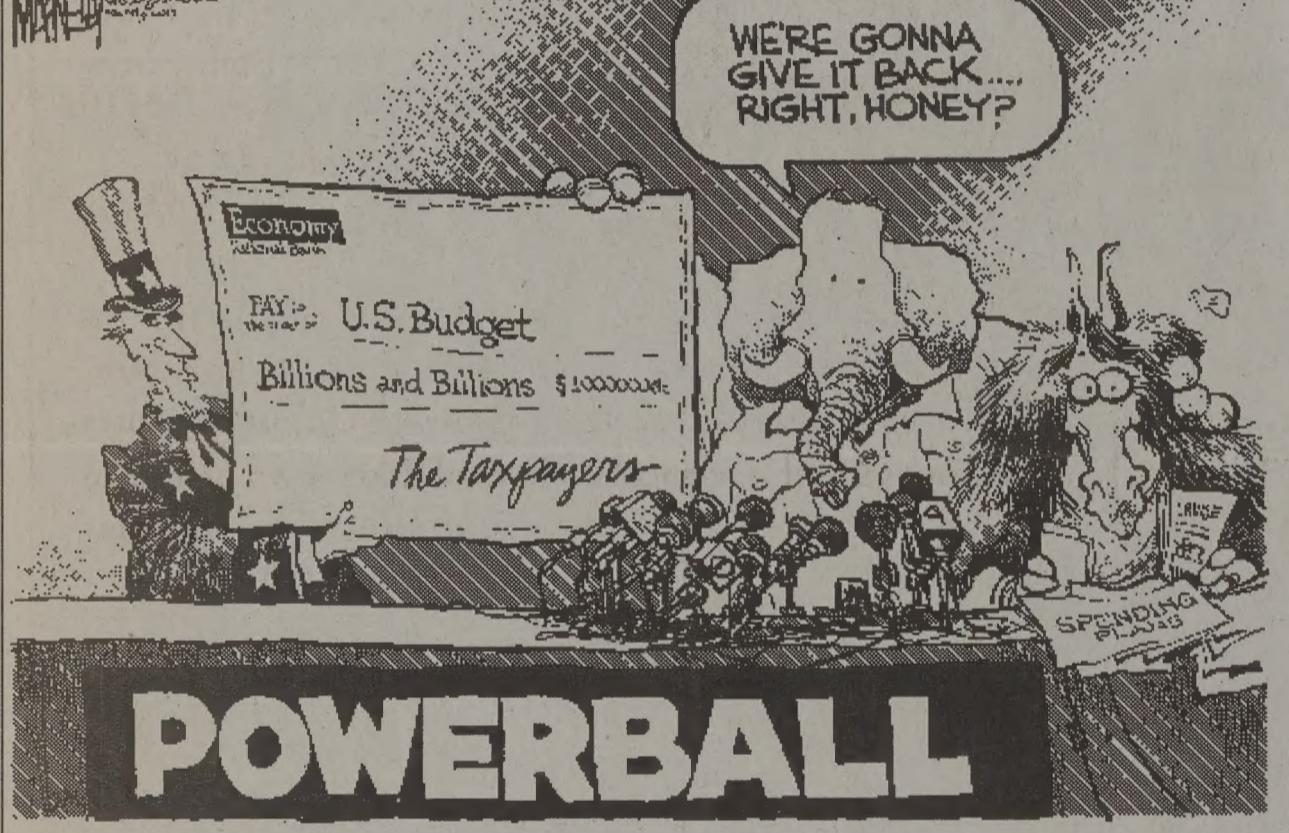

Being patriotic is more than going to a parade. According to our friend Webster, it is "love, loyalty or zealous support of one's country."

Supporting the country. Doesn't that mean obeying the laws of the land (like speed laws), participating in elections, and supporting those elected officials in their decisions — even the ones we don't like?

It's not how we celebrate the holiday, but why it is celebrated.

Americans died so that we could be free — free to practice our own religion, free to make choices and free to celebrate our freedom the way we want to with barbecues, fireworks and parades.

Viewpoint

Center to expand service

We are pleased to respond to the June 30 Viewpoint article "Y needs model of service."

The writer and many others have been actively involved in providing students with meaningful service opportunities connected with their academic disciplines. The good of many individual efforts across campus has been our "thousand points of light" that can inspire even greater contributions in the future.

We are disappointed, however, that the writer is apparently unaware of what is already going on at BYU. Like many of us, we contribute in our own corner of the university without fully appreciating the many good things that are happening. Therefore, we are very pleased the university has recently announced the creation of the Service and Learning Center at BYU. One great advantage of having an actual center focusing on service is the networking and collaboration that can help us in our individual efforts. The vision for this center matches the university's mission, the Aims of a BYU Education and our motto, "Go Forth to Serve."

A center for service at BYU should be a great benefit for our local community. At the same time, we should be involved more widely because our community is actually the world-wide LDS community.

A generous multi-million dollar endowment has been the recent trigger for the creation of this center. The proposal for the center grew out of a task force report prepared under the leadership of Student Life Vice President Alton Wade and Professor Lee Perry from the self-study effort in 1995. More recently, Paul Warner, as director of Student Leadership, and Professor Russ Osguthorpe from the Faculty Center renewed the request for the center.

The exciting thing about the center is the broad-based investment and support the university has given. The operating budgets and leadership positions for the center have been assigned from the academic vice president and from the Student Life vice president. It is fitting that these two sides of our university administration have joined together in organizing this center so it is concerned with both student development and academic connections.

Because no part of the endowment is being tapped to fund the staffing and operation of the center, the endowment's earnings can be dedicated to establishing and nurturing service and learning activities on campus.

Another indication of support from the university is the locations assigned to the new center. By August 1, we will move into our new space in the Wilkinson Student Center directly across the entrance from the Varsity Theater. Student organizations and service programs associated with the center will also have access to the space currently occupied by the Campus Involvement Center on the east end of the food court area. The university is anxious to place this center and its related programs in a location where it can reach out to the largest number of students possible.

The vision is huge. Our aim is to provide a full range of service experiences so every student will have opportunities for meaningful involvement during their years at BYU. That may come in the form of student-initiated community service programs supported by Student Life. BYUUSA currently offers 32 programs, each with direct ties to specific agencies or service opportunities in our local community. Student Life has also organized the Involvement Center as a clearinghouse of contacts and information about volunteer opportunities.

Other students' experiences may be enhanced by courses which specifically incorporate service-learning into the curriculum. Such service may be deepened by internships in service-related agencies or placements. Some students may serve in an international setting for a full semester through the International Field Studies and Internships.

The Service and Learning Center has wisely become the umbrella organization through which all student involvement in service and learning can be supported and coordinated. The benefit for every person on campus interested in increasing the outreach of BYU through service and learning programs should be immense.

We hope many others will join with us in raising and waving the banner of service and learning to inspire every member of the BYU community to imagine the possibilities for learning and service to family, church and the world-wide community.

Sympathy justified

Dear Editor:

I would like to respond to the letter "Remember the law" on June 30. Having graduated from BYU last year in April, the only news I get from BYU is by reading what is posted on the BYU NewsNet web page. I didn't read the article about illegal immigrants, but I did read one woman's letter of sympathy. I am in total agreement with her. Then I read the other letter. I understand that these immigrants are "illegal," as he was so quick to point out, and having known several "illegal" immigrants, I know that it can affect their lives and, at times, their personalities. But the writer should not be so quick to judge. First of all, having attended several Spanish-speaking wards before I got married, I know that they can receive temple recommends, even if the bishop knows that they are here illegally. And I wonder if the writer's sons were trying to get hired to work a graveyard shift (11 p.m.-8 a.m.) packing CDs for $6.00 an hour. That is only one example.

Many of the people that I have known working without legal permission are doing jobs that no other Americans would want to do, and for a lower wage. One last point. The writer pointed out that these illegal immigrants don't pay taxes on the monies they earn. All the ones I know do. They have a lot more deducted from their checks than anyone else I have ever met. I think the writer had good intentions, but I think he should not be so quick to judge a situation he is obviously not familiar with.

Privilege, not right

Dear Editor:

I am writing in response to the letter (June 30) about the "evil greed" of Proctor & Gamble. The writer asserts that P & G owes a debt to society because it profits from consumer's purchases, implying that P & G is a charity that receives donations from benevolent customers. Not so. The relationship between P & G and the public is a symbiotic one of mutually beneficial transactions, not a parasitic relationship. P & G's relationship with its employees is the same as its relationship with consumers. The workers give P & G their labor; P & G gives the workers its money. Both are better off. Otherwise the transaction wouldn't take place.

P & G has learned that trading with 15,000 of its workers is no longer mutually beneficial, and so the trading ceases. P & G doesn't have to lay off its workers. It can keep them, and by doing so inhibits its ability to give consumers the best products possible. Eventually, someone else (without deadweight workers) will offer the consumers a better deal.

Nobody has a right to a job. If people were entitled to jobs, then we must force someone to give that person a job. In a libertarian society that respects the rights of the individual, jobs are never "given." They are traded to the benefit of all parties involved. When jobs are obtained by force, we are on the path to a Marxist government. Does a person have any dignity when he is employed by government decree, knowing he is of no value to his employer? If we fall away from the principles of liberty, we will have a real social injustice on our hands.

Dear Editor:

In my infrequent reading of our student paper, I have noticed something at least twice. I would like to know why LeMar's night club has had the privilege of two colorful front page articles in our student paper? Maybe I'm wrong, but this sure seems like a misalignment of priorities.

Whether or not this belongs in our paper is debatable, but front page twice? Come on. I'm sure that you have better articles that would be glad to take front page. Either way, I'm sure LeMar's/Atchafalaya really appreciates all of the free publicity you are giving it. Way to go. You're doing a great job ... for who I wonder?

Not all are worse off

Dear Editor:

This letter is in response to the letter on June 30 (P & G forgets obligations) regarding Proctor and Gamble. The author of the letter didn't mention if he was directly affected by the cut in 15,000 P & G employees. I felt that I should respond because my father is one of the employees losing their jobs. However, my father and our family are quite happy with this decision. After working for 28 years with P & G, my father asked to be considered for early retirement. Due to this change in the structure of Proctor and Gamble, my parents are now able to move out to Utah to be closer to their older children.

Contrary to the arguments made in the letter, the result of my father having his "livelihood eliminated" will be the best thing that has happened to our family in many years. Also, not all corporate layoffs result in "increases in the divorce rate, child and spousal abuse, depression and suicide." I'm aware that these social ills can happen, but to infer that this is the case for all parties involved is reckless and damaging to Proctor and Gamble's image.

Not overzealous

Dear Editor:

I am writing in response to the article titled "Foreigners have different view on 4th" in The Universe on June 30. I was shocked at what one student from Canada had to say. She said, "For me it's much ado about nothing," and went on to say that "It's a nice occasion for the overly patriotic Americans to celebrate themselves." This student also said, "A lot of times Americans think theirs is the first country that did anything great." I'm sure that this student didn't mean these statements the way they sounded, but in case she did I have a few things to say about them.

First, it certainly isn't "much ado about nothing." This country was founded on principles based on inspiration from our Heavenly Father to the founding fathers of our nation. Thousands and thousands of men and women died so the founding fathers could set up this land under the constitution, which I might add the church has acknowledged as being inspired. It is by the blood of those thousands that we are able to write and express our opinions in papers such as this.

Second, Independence Day has a great deal of meaning. "Overly patriotic Americans" are not celebrating themselves, but the country in which they live. As I have served my country in the Armed Forces of this great country, I may have a stronger view than most, but I believe that deep in the soul of most Americans beats a heart that would be willing to die for this country if the need should arise. I think that when living in another country that enables you to join in the fruits of others' labors, you should be careful of saying things that would imply you are ungrateful for the sacrifices that have gone before you.

Third, I agree that sometimes we as Americans can be a bit arrogant about what our country contributes to this world. One need only to see American tourists in another country to see this as being true. However, I would like to add in our defense that a large portion of the world's food and economy is cultivated and nurtured within the borders of our great nation. Without us, many nations would starve or still be living in the dark ages. One only needs to remember that it was in this country that airplanes, telephones, automobiles, computers and other great inventions were created.

Admittedly, our government is not always pure or clear in its motives when involving itself in other nations' disputes. But if not for this country, much of this world would be communistic. Although not great things, we certainly are largest contributors. If you do not like the way you're welcome to where you came from. I would like to sick to your stomach because of play of patriotism.

In the article mentioned above, same attitude in one of the for responses. She talked about "nothing," overly-patriotic Americans brate themselves," etc.

I celebrated the Fourth of July. I'm Hungarian and I love Hungary and go to celebrate an establishment refuge to millions of oppressed to celebrate a country that's led by democracy and whose government served as an example for countries around the globe. At this very moment, millions are being persecuted because of their political views, religion, etc. people can't find jobs. Why does it seem "overly patriotic"? Because it that it won't happen here. They blessed they are.

Whatever country you're from, your national pride aside and cell where your dream can come true, you wouldn't be here, right?

Expand women's rights

Dear Editor:

Trivia: What major university (Olympic) in the United States offers nothing in Women's Studies? BYU.

While most colleges and universities in the country offer a major course in Women's Studies, BYU continues to deny the need for a Women's Studies department or major. Mind three whole courses at BYU in Women's Studies. If you wish the you have to enroll in a wide variety from across campus.

I began looking at Women's Studies in 1992. In the past seven years, attitude about the need for Women's Studies seems to have made progress, albeit. Please let me know if I am unique after searching the web (BYU, AOL, Nauvoo). I can see little information. If BYU wishes to host a Women's Conference, please let us know where a reader can find out more about Women's Studies.

Starzz pull it out in double OT

By ANGELLA GLENN
angella@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

Utah Starzz extended their winning streak to two Tuesday nights by beating the Detroit Shock, 104-94, in double overtime in the Delta Center. The game was the meeting of the teams this season. Detroit swept the three games the teams played last season.

Head coach Fred Williams was pleased with his team's play, especially on defense. "It was a hard-fought game and a game for women's pro basketball," Williams said. "We played well. I thought we played solid. A team like Detroit, they're the ones that'll make the runs on you, so you like to cut down their runs when they start to roll."

Starzz led 43-37 at the half and the entire second half until it's Sandy Brondello hit a point shot at the buzzer, taking the team to their first overtime at 80. That shot was one of Brondello's six three-pointers and 33 points.

Starzz' Margo Dydek opened overtime with a quick score to give the Starzz the early lead and Utah led until Brondello again.

Utah's jump ball between 5-foot-2 guard Debbi Black and 5-foot-6 Cindy Brown, a 6'2" forward with 9.2 seconds to go gave the ball. After a quick Shock timeout, Brondello again tied the game with a three, 93-93.

It came out strong again in the second overtime, taking advantage of Detroit's foul trouble and working through their zone defense, big inside and finishing the ten-point win.

Fred Williams was the Starzz' MVP, with 31 points and 10 rebounds, her seventh double-double in 10 games. Goodson finished with 25 points and six rebounds and Dydek had 14 points and a game-high 16 boards. Utah's five starters all played over 35 minutes, and three finished the game with five fouls.

Black, who had 9 rebounds and 10 assists, said she thinks her job is to keep the team focused.

"I'm not going to put a lot of points on the board," she said. "My job is to keep the intensity level up, keep the defense up, and control the tempo."

Black said the win was a boost for the team, which has suffered blowout losses to the likes of Minnesota and Houston.

Utah really played only seven players the entire game, using few substitutions. Coach Williams said he wanted to maintain the flow of the game and keep up the intensity.

The win comes after an 83-68 win over Cleveland Friday. The 15-point margin of victory was the largest in the Starzz' three-year history.

Next up for Utah, games at Washington and Orlando before hosting Phoenix July 12.

Fans pick All-Star starters

Griffey gets most votes overall; Sosa gets most in NL for Summer Classic

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Arizona second baseman Jay Bell overtook Craig Biggio Tuesday and joined Diamondbacks third baseman Matt Williams in the National League's starting lineup for next week's All-Star game.

The second-year Diamondbacks are the only NL team with two players in the starting lineup.

Mike Piazza of the New York Mets will be at catcher, Mark McGwire of St. Louis at first and Barry Larkin of Cincinnati at shortstop.

Chicago's Sammy Sosa, Colorado's Larry Walker and San Diego's Tony Gwynn were elected to start in the outfield. Gwynn, elected to his 15th All-Star game and 11th starting spot, is on the disabled list because of a calf injury. Gwynn has been taking batting practice and might be activated in time to play in the July 13 game at Boston's Fenway Park.

Bell, who beat Biggio 697,326 to 658,407 in totals announced last week, finished with 1,203,902, about 32,000 ahead of his Houston rival, who wound up at 1,171,574.

Before this week, none of the votes cast on the Internet had been included in the weekly totals. Fans were allowed to vote up to 22 times on the Internet — the average number of home games for each team during the balloting.

Larkin, who led New York's Rey Ordonez by fewer than 10,000 votes last week, won by a wide margin, 858,203 to 799,858. Larkin will be making his 10th All-Star appearance, his fourth as a starter.

Sosa, a three-time All-Star but a first-time starter, led all NL players at 2,315,204, picking up nearly 1 million votes in the final week of counting. He was followed by Walker at 1,147,524 and Gwynn at 1,054,785. San Francisco's Barry Bonds was fourth at 732,765.

Walker will be making his fourth appearance, his third straight as a starter.

Piazza will be going to his seventh straight All-Star game and is starting for the sixth consecutive time. McGwire, an 11-time All-Star, is starting for the seventh time.

Williams, a five-time All-Star, returns to the game for the first time since 1996 and will make his fourth start. For Bell, it's his second appearance and first start.

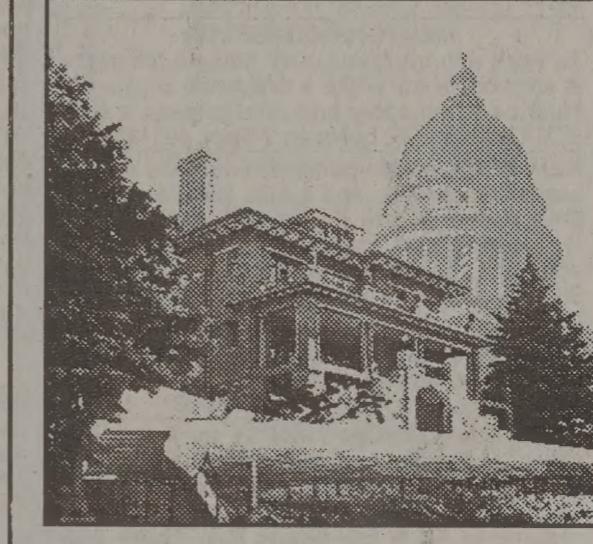

All starters were announced Monday. The lineup includes Cleveland's Roberto Alomar at second base, Jim Thome at first, and Manny Ramirez and Kenny Lofton in the outfield. They will be joined by Texas catcher Ivan Rodriguez, Boston shortstop Nomar Garciaparra, Baltimore third baseman Cal Ripken, Seattle outfielder Ken Griffey Jr. and Tampa Bay designated hitter Jose Canseco.

Pitchers and reserves for both leagues will be picked today.

Teen Kurd rebel kills self, injures 17

Associated Press

ADANA, Turkey — In the third major attack since Turkey sentenced Kurdish rebel leader Abdullah Ocalan to death, a suicide bomber blew herself up outside a police station, injuring 17 others.

The assailant, identified as 19-year-old Ruse Tabanci, flashed the "V" for victory sign before detonating the bombs strapped to her body, killing herself.

The Anatolia news agency said she was a Kurdish rebel wanted by security forces.

On Sunday, a bomb blast in a crowded Istanbul park killed one person and injured 25 others. Last week, four people were killed when a man and a woman in the southeastern city of Elazig raked a coffeehouse with gunfire.

Ocalan's Kurdish Workers Party, or PKK, claimed responsibility for the attack on the coffeehouse, saying it was used by right-wing nationalists.

Suspicion for the other attacks has also fallen on the group, which vowed to escalate attacks after Ocalan was sentenced to death June 29 for treason and separatism.

A lawyer for Ocalan said the rebel leader did not approve of the attacks.

"He said such attacks were not right and that he condemned them," Dogan Erbas said after visiting Ocalan at the prison island of Imrali, off Istanbul. Throughout his trial, Ocalan said he was willing to work for peace if he was spared the gallows and warned of increased violence by his followers if he is executed.

Meanwhile, Ocalan's lawyers formally applied Monday to appeal his death sentence, Anatolia reported.

The move was considered symbolic since all death sentences are automatically appealed.

In Monday's attack on the police station in the southern city of Adana, three civilians and 14 police officers were injured, police said. One of the injured was in serious condition, a police official said, speaking on customary condition of anonymity.

Local businesses find online benefits

By MANDY REDD

Electronic commerce is quickly becoming a reliable way to purchase goods and services and Provo businesses are trying to net some of the profits.

A variety of products are available from local retailers on the Internet, with many companies posting sites to showcase their goods.

MTC Cookies of Provo is in its fourth year of business on the Internet. The company attributes much of its success to Internet advertising.

"People from all over the world can find us on the Internet and that gives us a variety of customers," said owner Lisa Oliver. She said the company has not seen any disadvantages to doing online business. While there has been a good response from local customers, she said more customers come from outside Utah.

Local businesses are beginning to realize the benefits of doing business online, said Jeff West, owner of Jeff West Productions in Provo.

The company has done Web design for local businesses for two years. Small business owners that market a specific product or type of products make up much of West's clientele, West said.

Antennas and More, also located in Provo, has had its business on the Internet since March 1998. Prior to putting up the Web site, phone orders made up much of the company's earnings. Now phone orders account for only 5 percent of business.

"There are so many advantages to doing business on the Web. We now spend less time answering technical questions and can get our product out," said Wayne Smith, co-owner of Antennas and More.

Jeff West said one concern of merchants is that customers will feel secure making purchases. But the Internet has become a safer way to do business.

West said he expects e-commerce to continue growing in Utah County as more companies realize the benefits.

LDS members donate white dresses

By KATHIE HUNT

White Elegance is giving some women in Mexico the opportunity to attend the temple.

White Elegance makes white dresses, primarily for members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Second-hand dresses and dresses that are not sold are boxed and sent to bishops in Mexico for church members who cannot afford their own temple clothing.

"The response of the people in Mexico has been extraordinary. Members just stand and stare at the dresses. They pick up the dresses and just hold them, not even caring if the dresses are the right size," said Anna Barbieri, marketing and sales manager and a founder of White Elegance.

Barbieri and Tamera Perkins, production manager and the other founder of White Elegance, heard of female church members in Mexico who were not attending the temple because they could not afford temple clothing, Barbieri said.

"The church welcomes any efforts on the part of faithful Latter-day Saints to help their brothers and sisters go to the temple and enjoy the blessings offered there," said Dan Rascon of church public affairs.

Church members have learned of the work White Elegance is doing and donations of used dresses have poured in. Wards all over the country are doing collections. White Elegance has received donations from a ward in Allen, Texas, and a big shipment from Denver, Colo.

"People here have been terrific; it's wonderful to give the people a dress to treasure as I have treasured mine," Barbieri said.

BYU junior Brad Griggs from Biloxi, Miss., majoring in construction management, served in the Mexico Torreon Mission.

"There was a lot of sacrifice. They will definitely use (the clothing)," Griggs said.

Barbieri said White Elegance is trying to arrange for dresses to be sent to Romania. Members in Romania travel to Sweden, Switzerland and Germany to attend a temple.

"We are trying to focus on Third World countries," Barbieri said.

White Elegance also sends one dress from each size, a total of nine dresses, to temple presidents of the new smaller temples when the temples are completed.

Donations can be left at the White Elegance stores in Orem or Salt Lake City.

Orem mayor gets respect

BYU student receives attention as new mayor pro tem

By MATTHEW ASTLE
astle@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Joseph Andersen looks and acts a lot like any other 23-year-old BYU student, but he is becoming a celebrity in his hometown of Orem.

Andersen, an international law major, was elected to the Orem City Council about a year and a half ago. On June 22, he was chosen by his fellow councilmembers to serve as the mayor pro tem of Orem during September, October and November of this year.

The appointment has brought him plenty of attention.

"I was up at a wedding in Salt Lake and people came up to me and said, 'Hey, you're that mayor from Orem,'" Andersen said. "It is nice to be recognized."

The position of mayor pro tem rotates among the six councilmembers every six months, changing every January and July. But Andersen left for Quebec last week to tour with the Folk Ensemble until August 3. And in December, he has finals to deal with. During July, August and December, councilmember Steven Heinz will be mayor pro tem.

The mayor of Orem, Joe Nelson, has been hospitalized with lymphatic cancer for three months, leaving the mayor pro tem to be acting mayor in all functions.

"It's just a big responsibility," Andersen said.

Andersen said that he plans to take a lighter class load this Fall Semester in order to have time for his civic duties. He said he hopes his tenure as acting mayor will count as extra credit in Political Science 150, Comparative Government and Politics.

"I need to go in and talk to them and see if they'll count it as class credit," he laughed. "You learn a lot more doing this than sitting in a class is hands-on kind of stuff."

The public seems surprised and supportive young

Russian troops in Kosovo

Russia is expected to deploy up to 3,600 troops in Kosovo.

Russian officials arrive in Kosovo

Associated Press

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia — The first plane load of new Russian peacekeepers landed in Kosovo's capital Tuesday, a day after NATO brokered an agreement with Moscow on their deployment.

Their presence is seen as a way to help ease the fears of Kosovo's minority Serbs, who have come under attack from vengeful ethnic Albanians.

With the ranks of the peacekeepers in Kosovo filling out, the head of the U.N. refugee agency warned that her agency was running short of funds to help hundreds of thousands of returning refugees.

The Russian Il-76 transport plane left from the southern Russian town of Ivanovo this morning for the flight to Pristina. It was to be followed by three more planes Tuesday, Russia's Interfax news agency said.

Some 200 peacekeepers, 20 vehicles and 20 tons of other cargo were to be ferried to Kosovo on the planes, the report said.

The deployment, originally planned for last weekend, came a day after NATO and Russian negotiators resolved the latest dispute over the role Russian troops will play in Kosovo.

Russia, a traditional ally of Serbia, was seeking to change the agreement reached in Helsinki, Finland, last month and allow its troops the freedom to operate outside NATO command throughout the province. NATO wanted to restrict the Russians to certain areas to prevent any partition of Kosovo.

NATO thwarted the weekend deployment by getting Hungary, Romania and Bulgaria to refuse Russia permission to fly through their airspace.

Under the agreement reached Monday in Moscow, the Russian reinforcements can patrol in the northern sector of the area controlled by American troops, the northwestern part of the German area and a small piece of the French sector.

"The knot of problems around sending Russian peacekeepers to Kosovo has been cut," Russian President Boris Yeltsin was quoted as saying Tuesday by Interfax.
